Krótki opis / Short description
MA Seminar focus/topic: Reflective teaching of English as a foreign language MA Seminar description (what to expect): The MA seminar is addressed to those prospective students whose main area of research interest falls within the general field of applied linguistics. Candidates recruiting for the English Philology - Teacher Training Program major (part time studies) are, by definition, seeking qualifications in the profession of a teacher of English as a foreign language. For this reason, the Master's seminar will focus on expanding their research interests in the field of education and applied linguistics. The thematic scope of this particular seminar circles around two main topics, namely the teacher in the language class – challenges and success areas in the profession, and reflectivity in the process of foreign language teaching. The type of research methodology suggested for the seminar group will be action research, as the particular studies will be conducted preferably in own classrooms. MA Seminar reading list (1-2 positions): Farrel, T. (2007). Reflective language teaching: From research to practice. Continuum Wallace, M. (1998). Action research for language teachers. Cambridge University Press
